EDITORIAL

This issue begins with a detailed analysis by Jean Warburton of the powers of charitable bodies to fund campaigning activities of other organisations that may have a political character.

Peter Luxton contributes a critical review of the Charity Commission's power to determine public benefit following the introduction of the Charities Act 2006.

In the following article Robert Meakin argues that the Charity Commission's powers to remove charities from the register are more limited in law than might be thought to be the case.

The final article features a review by Francesca Quint of the judicial approach to the application of the cy-pres principle in both England and Wales and Scotland.

We conclude this issue with a review of the new book by Robert Meakin examining the Charity Commission's powers to remove charities from the register.

We hope that these articles will stimulate debate and discussion among our readers. All correspondence should be addressed to the Managing Editor:
